Academic Literacy

Sounds intimidating, doesn't it?

Not at all!

Now you have the chance to prepare yourself for the world of higher education!

Prepare yourself for university admission

Students who are now in Grades 10 to 12 will soon face the challenges and demands of using academic language in the world of tertiary education.

Even if you do not plan to go to university, you will meet similar challenges in your work-life after school.

Senior secondary school students now have to prove that they are able to understand and use academic language before they start their university studies.

Most tertiary educational institutions now require prospective students to complete academic literacy tests, such as the Academic and Quantitative Literacy component (AQL) of the National Benchmark Tests (NBTs).

The LAD Workshop

Test your ability!

You can now attend a Language Assessment and Development workshop to test and develop your academic language ability. It is presented by highly experienced teachers in first and additional language teaching in South Africa and internationally, and professional language practitioners.

The quality and efficiency of the literacy tests are indisputable. They derive from the creative designs and practical experience of a team of experts from several South African universities.
